Letter Bomb Summary

On 29 November, Adman Hammad, a Jordanian student in Erlangen, West Germany, was severely injured when a letter bomb that he had received exploded. The postmark indicated that the letter had been mailed in Lebanon. Hammad was on a list of persons to be deported from West Germany because of his affiliation with Fatah and also with the General Union of Palestinian Workers and General Union of Palestinian Students. (UNCLASSIFIED)

On 29 November, Omar Ibrahim Sufan, a Jordanian student in Stockholm, received a double-enveloped letter that exploded and severely injured him when he opened it. The letter contained an electrical device that appeared to be relatively sophisticated. The envelope bore Swedish stamps and a false Stockholm return address. Sufan had been active in the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. (UNCLASSIFIED)

A letter bomb exploded in Copenhagen on 30 November, seriously injuring Sahmad Ahmed Awadalla, a Palestinian who is a member of the Palestinian Labor Union. The envelope had no return address but was postmarked Beirut. On the same day, another letter from Beirut was turned in by an Arab to the police for examination. (UNCLASSIFIED)

Arming the Booby-Trap Device

The main switch is placed on "off." A journal is wrapped round the cardboard cylinder, thereby pressing down the pin, compressing the spring and opening the detonator switch. When the journal is securely in place, the main switch is placed on "on."

Actuation of the Mechanism

When the journal is unwrapped, the spring pushes the pin through the hole in the cardboard cylinder, thereby closing the detonator switch and setting off the explosive charge by means of the electric detonators.
